To whom it may concern,

I'm writing with the hope of a response to a very undemocratic role that's been proposed to be rolled out in the NT. Further to this response I would be interested in receiving details about how the law will support such a role.

Firstly, how will the role fit within the legislative powers of the territory?

Secondly, what measures will be taken to prevent litigation from other parties against decisions made in this position.

Having a keen interest in constitutional law I'm baffled by such a role, therefore I'm very concerned about the advice the current government has received and I encourage you to get verification from an external consultant

Looking forward to a response,

Astrid Joyce
