Dear Chair and Committee Members,

RE: Lands and Planning Legislation Amendment (Red Tape Reduction) Bill 2026 (Serial 77)

We, the undersigned practicing building certifiers in the Northern Territory, write in relation to the proposed amendments to the Building Act 1993 (NT) and Building Regulations 1993 (NT) contained in Serial 77. We support the objective of improving administrative efficiency, reducing unnecessary delay and ensuring that building regulation remains effective and proportionate.

However, from our practical review of the proposed building amendments, we are concerned that a number of the changes do not appear likely to reduce red tape and may instead introduce additional administrative steps, documentation, delay, cost and regulatory uncertainty for certifiers, builders, consultants and building owners.

Examples include the removal of the established expression “in all material respects” from inspection and occupancy provisions, the proposed requirement for inspection certificates to be issued within 14 days of an inspection, additional reporting and documentary obligations, changes to reporting-authority processes and timeframes, and broader regulatory and enforcement provisions. While individual amendments may have a legitimate policy purpose, their combined operational effect should be tested carefully against the stated objective of red-tape reduction.

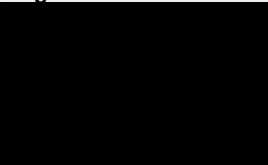

Of particular concern is that these changes do not appear to have been the subject of sufficient or meaningful consultation with the local building certifiers who apply the Building Act and Regulations on a daily basis. Consultation after drafting is substantially advanced can make it difficult for practical consequences, unintended outcomes and workable alternatives to be properly identified before legislation is settled.

We therefore respectfully ask the Committee to consider whether the building-law amendments should be subject to further targeted consultation before finalisation. Local building certifiers can provide practical examples of how the proposed provisions would operate on real projects, identify areas where additional red tape may arise, and suggest alternatives that may better achieve the Government’s stated objectives without reducing appropriate regulatory oversight.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Legislative Scrutiny Committee as a group, or to participate in any further industry consultation arranged by the Committee, to discuss these matters constructively.

Yours faithfully,

Local Building Certifiers of the Northern Territory

Dear Chair and Committee Members,

RE: Lands and Planning Legislation Amendment (Red Tape Reduction) Bill 2026 (Serial 77)

We, the undersigned practicing building certifiers in the Northern Territory, write in relation to the proposed amendments to the Building Act 1993 (NT) and Building Regulations 1993 (NT) contained in Serial 77. We support the objective of improving administrative efficiency, reducing unnecessary delay and ensuring that building regulation remains effective and proportionate.

However, from our practical review of the proposed building amendments, we are concerned that a number of the changes do not appear likely to reduce red tape and may instead introduce additional administrative steps, documentation, delay, cost and regulatory uncertainty for certifiers, builders, consultants and building owners.

Examples include the removal of the established expression "in all material respects" from inspection and occupancy provisions, the proposed requirement for inspection certificates to be issued within 14 days of an inspection, additional reporting and documentary obligations, changes to reporting-authority processes and timeframes, and broader regulatory and enforcement provisions. While individual amendments may have a legitimate policy purpose, their combined operational effect should be tested carefully against the stated objective of red-tape reduction.

Of particular concern is that these changes do not appear to have been the subject of sufficient or meaningful consultation with the local building certifiers who apply the Building Act and Regulations on a daily basis. Consultation after drafting is substantially advanced can make it difficult for practical consequences, unintended outcomes and workable alternatives to be properly identified before legislation is settled.

We therefore respectfully ask the Committee to consider whether the building-law amendments should be subject to further targeted consultation before finalisation. Local building certifiers can provide practical examples of how the proposed provisions would operate on real projects, identify areas where additional red tape may arise, and suggest alternatives that may better achieve the Government's stated objectives without reducing appropriate regulatory oversight.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Legislative Scrutiny Committee as a group, or to participate in any further industry consultation arranged by the Committee, to discuss these matters constructively.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Chair and Committee Members,

RE: Lands and Planning Legislation Amendment (Red Tape Reduction) Bill 2026 (Serial 77)

We, the undersigned practicing building certifiers in the Northern Territory, write in relation to the proposed amendments to the Building Act 1993 (NT) and Building Regulations 1993 (NT) contained in Serial 77. We support the objective of improving administrative efficiency, reducing unnecessary delay and ensuring that building regulation remains effective and proportionate.

However, from our practical review of the proposed building amendments, we are concerned that a number of the changes do not appear likely to reduce red tape and may instead introduce additional administrative steps, documentation, delay, cost and regulatory uncertainty for certifiers, builders, consultants and building owners.

Examples include the removal of the established expression “in all material respects” from inspection and occupancy provisions, the proposed requirement for inspection certificates to be issued within 14 days of an inspection, additional reporting and documentary obligations, changes to reporting-authority processes and timeframes, and broader regulatory and enforcement provisions. While individual amendments may have a legitimate policy purpose, their combined operational effect should be tested carefully against the stated objective of red-tape reduction.

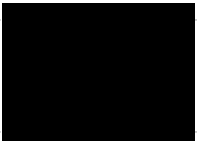

Of particular concern is that these changes do not appear to have been the subject of sufficient or meaningful consultation with the local building certifiers who apply the Building Act and Regulations on a daily basis. Consultation after drafting is substantially advanced can make it difficult for practical consequences, unintended outcomes and workable alternatives to be properly identified before legislation is settled.

We therefore respectfully ask the Committee to consider whether the building-law amendments should be subject to further targeted consultation before finalisation. Local building certifiers can provide practical examples of how the proposed provisions would operate on real projects, identify areas where additional red tape may arise, and suggest alternatives that may better achieve the Government’s stated objectives without reducing appropriate regulatory oversight.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Legislative Scrutiny Committee as a group, or to participate in any further industry consultation arranged by the Committee, to discuss these matters constructively.

Yours faithfully,

Local Building Certifiers of the Northern Territory

Dear Chair and Committee Members,

RE: Lands and Planning Legislation Amendment (Red Tape Reduction) Bill 2026 (Serial 77)

We, the undersigned practicing building certifiers in the Northern Territory, write in relation to the proposed amendments to the Building Act 1993 (NT) and Building Regulations 1993 (NT) contained in Serial 77. We support the objective of improving administrative efficiency, reducing unnecessary delay and ensuring that building regulation remains effective and proportionate.

However, from our practical review of the proposed building amendments, we are concerned that a number of the changes do not appear likely to reduce red tape and may instead introduce additional administrative steps, documentation, delay, cost and regulatory uncertainty for certifiers, builders, consultants and building owners.

Examples include the removal of the established expression “in all material respects” from inspection and occupancy provisions, the proposed requirement for inspection certificates to be issued within 14 days of an inspection, additional reporting and documentary obligations, changes to reporting-authority processes and timeframes, and broader regulatory and enforcement provisions. While individual amendments may have a legitimate policy purpose, their combined operational effect should be tested carefully against the stated objective of red-tape reduction.

Of particular concern is that these changes do not appear to have been the subject of sufficient or meaningful consultation with the local building certifiers who apply the Building Act and Regulations on a daily basis. Consultation after drafting is substantially advanced can make it difficult for practical consequences, unintended outcomes and workable alternatives to be properly identified before legislation is settled.

We therefore respectfully ask the Committee to consider whether the building-law amendments should be subject to further targeted consultation before finalisation. Local building certifiers can provide practical examples of how the proposed provisions would operate on real projects, identify areas where additional red tape may arise, and suggest alternatives that may better achieve the Government’s stated objectives without reducing appropriate regulatory oversight.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Legislative Scrutiny Committee as a group, or to participate in any further industry consultation arranged by the Committee, to discuss these matters constructively.

Yours faithfully,

Local Building Certifiers of the Northern Territory

Chair, Legislative Scrutiny Committee
Legislative Assembly of the Northern Territory
GPO Box 3721
Darwin NT 0801

Dear Chair and Committee Members,

RE: Lands and Planning Legislation Amendment (Red Tape Reduction) Bill 2026 (Serial 77)

We, the undersigned practicing building certifiers in the Northern Territory, write in relation to the proposed amendments to the Building Act 1993 (NT) and Building Regulations 1993 (NT) contained in Serial 77. We support the objective of improving administrative efficiency, reducing unnecessary delay and ensuring that building regulation remains effective and proportionate.

However, from our practical review of the proposed building amendments, we are concerned that a number of the changes do not appear likely to reduce red tape and may instead introduce additional administrative steps, documentation, delay, cost and regulatory uncertainty for certifiers, builders, consultants and building owners.

Examples include the removal of the established expression “in all material respects” from inspection and occupancy provisions, the proposed requirement for inspection certificates to be issued within 14 days of an inspection, additional reporting and documentary obligations, changes to reporting-authority processes and timeframes, and broader regulatory and enforcement provisions. While individual amendments may have a legitimate policy purpose, their combined operational effect should be tested carefully against the stated objective of red-tape reduction.

Of particular concern is that these changes do not appear to have been the subject of sufficient or meaningful consultation with the local building certifiers who apply the Building Act and Regulations on a daily basis. Consultation after drafting is substantially advanced can make it difficult for practical consequences, unintended outcomes and workable alternatives to be properly identified before legislation is settled.

We therefore respectfully ask the Committee to consider whether the building-law amendments should be subject to further targeted consultation before finalisation. Local building certifiers can provide practical examples of how the proposed provisions would operate on real projects, identify areas where additional red tape may arise, and suggest alternatives that may better achieve the Government’s stated objectives without reducing appropriate regulatory oversight.

We would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Legislative Scrutiny Committee as a group, or to participate in any further industry consultation arranged by the Committee, to discuss these matters constructively.

Yours faithfully,

Local Building Certifiers of the Northern Territory
