Good senators - please consider where these bills go when passed. Look at the Netherlands and Belgium. They start killing the elderly, but after x number of years, it seems to normally get widened out to sometimes even include unhappy teenagers being able to end it all. Try looking an elderly person in the eye and saying to them - "I'm fine with having you killed, if that's what you want". Something inside us tells us, that this is not right. Just like killing unborn babies - the overall result is a hardening of our hearts toward all human life, until we end up like the Romans, who would leave any unwanted babies out in the cold night to die.

And where is the mighty Roman Empire, that almost covered the then known world. I certainly don't want this land that I love, to end up just a section in a history book.

Thank you for hearing me.
