POLITICAL DONATIONS AND PUBLIC FUNDING REFORM

HAVE YOUR SAY!

Please read the discussion paper prior to completing the survey.

The survey will take approximately 5-10 minutes.

Electoral Expenditure

In the NT, there are currently no limits imposed on spending by parties, candidates or associated entities during election campaigns. Imposing a limit on spending may lead to a reduced reliance on political donations.

Options for reform (Choose one)

- a. Introduce an indexed cap on electoral expenditure of $40,000 per endorsed candidate in the cases of registered political parties, and fixed at $40,000 per unendorsed candidate.
- b. Introduce a cap of $ _____ on electoral expenditure per endorsed candidate in the cases of registered political parties, and fixed at $ _____ per unendorsed candidate.

Please specify the cap level

(Answer this question only if you have chosen b.)

Should travel and accommodation expenses be excluded or included in the definition of electoral expenses? (Choose one)

- Excluded
- Included

POLITICAL DONATIONS AND PUBLIC FUNDING REFORM HAVE YOUR SAY!

Political Donations

There are currently no caps on monetary donations in the NT, except for those given by anonymous donors.

Options for reform (Choose one)

- a. Introduce an indexed cap on political donations of $10,000
- b. Introduce an indexed cap on political donations of $5,000

- d. Introduce an indexed cap on political donations of an amount less than $10,000 per year

Please specify the cap level

(Answer this question only if you have chosen c or d.)

Public Funding

The primary reason for public funding is to reduce the perceived or actual influence of private money on elections and public policy. All other Australian jurisdictions (except Tasmania) provide a form of public funding to candidates. There is currently no public funding provided to parties or candidates in the NT.

Options for reform (Choose one)

- a. Introduce a partial and 'opt-in' public funding model with a qualification threshold of 4% of the formal first preference votes in the particular electorate where the candidate is standing for election.
- b. Introduce a partial and 'opt-in' public funding model with a qualification threshold of _____ % of the formal first preference votes in the particular electorate where the candidate is standing for election.

Please specify the qualification threshold

(Answer this question only if you have chosen b.)

Options for reform (Choose one)

- a. Introduce a partial and 'opt-in' public funding model with a level of funding of $8 (to be indexed) per first preference vote received by a candidate (based on reimbursement of campaign expenses in election years).
- b. Introduce a partial and 'opt-in' public funding model with a level of funding of $_____ (to be indexed) per first preference vote received by a candidate (based on reimbursement of campaign expenses in election years).

QUESTIONS FOR THE COMMUNITY HAVE YOUR SAY

Question 1: What (if any) Greenhouse Gas emissions target should the Northern Territory adopt?

Greenhouse gas emissions from human activities are the drivers of human-caused climate change. Every jurisdiction emits greenhouse gases generated from activities by people, small business and industry.

In order to tackle the increase in greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, countries have signed up to international agreements committing them to reducing their emissions within given timeframes. This can be expressed as a percentage by a certain year or as a percentage below a previous year's emissions.

The latest international agreement is the Paris Agreement of November 2016. It commits Australia to a target of reducing GHG emissions by 26-28% below 2005 levels by 2030. In order for Australia to meet this target, each state and territory has a role to play. Although the NT's emissions are a lot smaller than states like NSW and WA, it is still important for us to decide what level of emissions reduction (if any) we are willing to sign up for, and if this commitment is best represented by a numerical target.

A number of other Australian states and territories have GHG emissions targets ranging from 20% reduction to net zero emissions.

Without a target, it will be difficult for the NT to evaluate effectiveness of emissions policies.

Different sectors make different contributions to the Territory's total GHG emissions and will contribute different emissions mitigation outcomes. Instead of a Territory-wide target, one option is to develop different targets for different sectors as each sector has a different level of impact.

Question 2: What should businesses and governments be doing to reduce emissions?

In addition to commitments by governments to reduce emissions from their activities, businesses are becoming increasingly involved in climate change issues. Many companies are committing to taking real action to address climate change, making pledges to decrease their GHG emissions, reduce their reliance on carbon-rich fuels and invest in sustainable resource management and renewable technology.

An increasing proportion of the private sector is also calling on governments to take climate change action.

Businesses and governments both have many opportunities to reduce emissions.

Some examples of business initiatives are:

- Supporting local offset programs, particularly carbon offset programs through fire management
- Prioritising the use of local suppliers and enhancing supply chain efficiency to reduce supply chain emissions;
- Utilising energy efficient equipment and processes that both lower emissions and reduce production costs
- Collaborating with researchers to investigate options to lower their carbon emissions through innovative operation methods and models
- Setting their own voluntary energy efficiency, renewable energy or emissions targets
- Setting their own bans on single use plastics.

Some examples of government initiatives are:

- Using energy efficient technologies for buildings and transport
- Using greater amounts of renewable energy as a proportion of total energy use
- Partnering with industry to research innovative solutions to mitigate their emissions
- Engaging with animal and plant production industries to adopt sustainable practices

If you know of any businesses taking action on climate change or if you know what you would like to see more businesses doing, let us know! If you're a business owner who recognises the cost of climate change to doing business, let us know what you need to adapt and mitigate. Or, if you think climate smart investments could help your bottom line, let us know what support you would like to see to make those investments happen.

Question 3: How else can we better apply Aboriginal knowledge and practices to help us to mitigate and adapt to climate change?

Aboriginal people are more likely to be impacted negatively by climate change due to their close relationship with, and dependence on the land. Some Aboriginal communities are already being impacted by the effects of climate change.

Aboriginal people have managed country over millennia through a variety of traditional practices, most notably, land and sea management practices such as:

- Using the most appropriate vegetation varieties for re-growth in areas where water resources are limited / the soil quality cannot support previously grown varieties
- Maintaining a diversity of plant varieties and animal species for food
- Managing aquaculture and mangroves
- Adjusting the times of savanna burning to reduce emissions from wildfires
- Relocating to new areas when their homes have been affected by drought, floods, sea level rise or increased temperatures

Aboriginal people therefore have much knowledge to share.

Question 4: What potential opportunities can you see emerging from climate change in the Territory?

As extreme weather events and other significant changes to the climate become apparent, we will all need to be part of more intensive responses and adaptation. However, just as climate change poses risks for businesses, governments and communities, opportunities also arise in mitigating and adapting to these risks. Some key examples include:

- Smart building design: increased shade and airflow to reduce the need for air-conditioning in the tropics; utilising sunshine for cooler seasons and reinforcing walls for heat in the desert. Companies offering these building services may take advantage of significant increases in opportunities brought about by a changing climate.
- Renewable energy opportunities: Providers of renewable energy will have increased business opportunities and there will be more opportunities for those providing renewable energy education and training.
- Sustainable meat industries – Domestic and international demand for and interest in sustainable meat such as kangaroo, camel and crocodile are set to increase with climate change related pressures increasing.
- Energy efficiency solutions for businesses – providers of consultancy services that specialise in sustainability or environmentally conscious services

Developers of innovative technology in all sectors will see increased opportunity and demand for products that mitigate emissions or assist in adaptation.

If you have any innovative ideas for mitigating the risks brought about by climate change or know what opportunities you would like to see supported, let us know!

Question 5: How can the fossil fuel industry further reduce emissions from energy production?

Energy production is essential for our livelihoods and lifestyle – for example, fuel for cooking and transport, and electricity. Many of the products we use in our daily lives are petroleum-based - for example, plastics in bags containers, technology casing, vehicle interiors, and clothing.

The fossil fuel industry is one provider of energy, in order to operate, they must gain a 'social licence', and part of this is reducing emissions and adopting more sustainable practices. This can be achieved in a variety of ways, for example, taking part in the voluntary carbon market. The voluntary carbon market allows industry to offset their emissions by purchasing credits in projects which sequester (reduce) emissions, for example, savanna fire management practices.

Another option is to put a cap on carbon emissions. This would allow the government to allocate or sell a limited number of permits to discharge pollutants in a given period to the largest emitters. Emitters are required to hold permits in amount equal to their emissions. If they want to increase their emissions, they must buy permits from others willing to sell them. This system is currently in place in some American states.

Question 3: How else can we better apply Aboriginal knowledge and practices to help us to mitigate and adapt to climate change?

Aboriginal people are more likely to be impacted negatively by climate change due to their close relationship with, and dependence on the land. Some Aboriginal communities are already being impacted by the effects of climate change.

Question 5: How can the fossil fuel industry further reduce emissions from energy production?

Energy production is essential for our livelihoods and lifestyle – for example, fuel for cooking and transport, and electricity. Many of the products we use in our daily lives are petroleum-based - for example, plastics in bags containers, technology casing, vehicle interiors, and clothing.

The fossil fuel industry is one provider of energy, in order to operate, they must gain a 'social licence', and part of this is reducing emissions and adopting more sustainable practices. This system is currently in place in some American states.

Question 6: What type of regulations do you think would assist industry in being accountable for their impact on climate change?

Many companies have a principal obligation to prepare a sustainability report through their industry codes. For example, mining companies reports on CO2 emissions from its operations, and are accountable for any excess emissions. This encourages companies to manage their emissions better. Self-regulation is one option that provides flexibility to self-impose targets and reduce climate impact in an affordable, sustainable and manageable way.

Another option is increased government regulation of industry. This can be good when it is in the public interest and would likely require specific requirements or standards to address climate change associated risks or damage. However, the prescriptive nature of some government regulation can limit industry flexibility and is often expensive to administer.

As mentioned above, governments can regulate industry through cap and trade systems, while some countries such as Sweden have put taxes on carbon emissions. In Victoria, the government has a range of powers designed to assist meeting the state carbon emission reduction target. For example, the Environment Protection Authority has the power to enforce the replacement of inefficient technology used at sites of emissions intensive activity.

Government can also regulate to reduce emissions from households. This would include initiatives aimed at driving consumer behaviour and could include incentives for being 'green'. The downside of this is that it can be an expensive option for government and hence taxpayers.

Question 7: Are you prepared to pay higher prices for goods and services as businesses pass on the cost of mitigation? If yes, what actions are you willing to take to mitigate or reduce the impact of climate change?

The following are some options for reducing emissions:

- A public levy on some products: would provide funds that could be used to develop more sustainable technology and/or be used to offset the climate impact of the product you are consuming
- Greening your commute: This can mean you take the bus, ride a bike, car share, walk, offset your emissions when you fly, drive an electric or hybrid vehicle if the option is available
- Make your household single-use plastic free: This can include using glass containers, choosing not to purchase items that use less plastic packaging and investing in a reusable coffee cup (often resulting in a discount for your coffee)
- Using energy wisely can mean you: change to energy-efficient light bulbs, unplug appliances when you're not using them, use cold water in the washing machine, minimise use of a clothes dryer, install a programmable thermostat, look for energy star labels when buying new appliances or get a home or workplace energy audit to identify where you can make energy-saving (and cost saving!) gains
- Changing consumption means you could: eat a meat-free meal at least once a week and buy local produce
- Install solar systems in residential, rental or business properties; or seek advice on clean energy investments in your financial portfolio

Question 8: What support do you need to help you to mitigate or adapt to climate change?

Financial incentives – For example tax rebates, energy efficiency rebates for using less energy in homes and businesses, solar bonuses (grants for solar PV systems or feed-in-tariffs), reduced costs for electric vehicle purchases etc.

Education on energy efficiency – Possible options include:

- Having a Smart Meter to measure how much electricity we use so that we can change our behaviours to use energy at different times of the day. (Using electricity at low peak times can result in lower electricity bills. When many people use electricity at the same time - peak time, the utilities company needs to use more resources to produce the energy. This results in higher costs to customers).
- Receiving information from the electricity provider on how to save electricity
- Receiving information on the electricity savings from having rooftop solar systems

HYDRAULIC FRACTURING INQUIRY IMPLEMENTATION ONSHORE SHALE GAS COMMUNITY AND BUSINESS REFERENCE GROUP

TERMS OF REFERENCE

1. Background

On 27 March 2018, the Scientific Inquiry into Hydraulic Fracturing in the Northern Territory (the Inquiry) released its Final Report. The Inquiry found that provided the recommendations in the report are adopted and implemented, the environmental, social, cultural and economic risks associated with hydraulic fracturing of shale reservoirs could be minimised to an acceptable level.

On the 17 April 2018, the Northern Territory Government accepted all the recommendations of the Inquiry and lifted the moratorium on unconventional gas in the Northern Territory. The Inquiry recommended a series of actions be completed before exploration approvals are issued, with the remainder implemented before any production begins. Responsibility for implementing the 135 recommendations spans a number of different departments. The Department of the Chief Minister has established an implementation team to coordinate the delivery of the recommendations.

Chapter 16 of the Final Report makes recommendations regarding coordinating implementation. Recommendations 16.2, 16.3 and 16.4 set out the need for an implementation framework, team and reference group respectively.

2. Purpose

The Onshore Shale Gas Community and Business Reference Group (Reference Group) provides a forum for Government to seek advice and share information on the development of the implementation plan to deliver on the 135 recommendations and their subsequent execution.

The purpose of the Reference Group is to provide:

- Advice to the Northern Territory Government on the implementation plan and its subsequent execution to ensure that the plan aligns with community and industry expectations;
- a forum to share information and provide opportunities for cooperation, and collaboration with key stakeholders and the community; and
- a medium through which key stakeholders can communicate their views about the implementation framework and its subsequent execution directly to the Government.

3. Composition of the Reference Group

The Chief Executive of the Department of the Chief Minister invited a Chairperson and members to be part of the Reference Group.

The members appointed bring a diversity of skills and stakeholder views from the community, environmental groups, local business, land councils, the gas industry, and local Government.

Non-government appointees are entitled to sitting fees for non-statutory bodies as defined by Class C2 sitting fees.

Members are entitled to be paid a travelling allowance for each overnight stay away from the member's usual place of residence, and reimbursement of reasonable expenses as approved by the Chairperson, upon production of receipts.

4. Code of Conduct

To maximise transparency and enhance value of the Reference Group, members may receive information deemed as confidential or sensitive. Members shall not distribute papers deemed confidential or disclose confidential information, and will be required to sign a disclosure of interests.

Members shall act ethically and be respectful of differing views within the Reference Group. Members shall declare interests which may constitute a conflict, and not seek to obtain a benefit, pecuniary or otherwise, from the information received by being a member of the Reference Group.

5. Terms of Appointment

The Membership of the Reference Group will be for a one year term. Members who do not attend two consecutive meetings may have their membership reviewed by the Chairperson.

6. Role of the Chairperson

The Chairperson will be the only media spokesperson for the Reference Group.

The Chairperson will advise members of their roles and responsibilities as members of the Reference Group.

The Chairperson will conduct meetings to foster effective consideration of issues referred to or raised by the Reference Group.

The Chairperson will settle meeting dates and agendas for meetings.

The Chairperson may nominate an alternate Chair in the event they are not able to attend a meeting.

7. Operating arrangements

Four meetings will be held during the appointment period.

A quorum for a meeting of the Reference Group shall comprise half the membership.

Proxies are not permitted.

The Chairperson may invite a non-member to attend meetings.

8. Reporting arrangements

The Reference Group will develop a public communique in each meeting to be made available on the website within 7 days following the meeting. It is the intent that the Communique will be interpreted into Aboriginal languages, in accordance with availability and advice from the Aboriginal Interpreter Service.

The Reference Group will provide direct feedback and advice to the Hydraulic Fracturing Inquiry Implementation Taskforce in the Department of the Chief Minister.

9. Role of Government Agencies

The Hydraulic Fracturing Inquiry Implementation Taskforce in the Department of the Chief Minister will provide secretariat support to the Reference Group and will help the Chairperson organise meetings, prepare agendas and record of meetings.
